

Genre: Realistic Fiction

Setting: Theater

Object: Toothpaste

Toothpaste at the Theaters

By: Adelynn Sloan

I was going to go to the movies today, but I had to get ready first. So I was going to brush my teeth and I dropped my toothpaste cap down the sink. I didn't really care because the movie started soon, so I just kept getting ready.

I fell and I must've dropped my toothpaste in the bag with my new soft blanket in it, but I was too rushed to realize that it fell in.

I was driving to the movies, and I realized I forgot my wallet! So, I drove all the way back home. I got my wallet. So I went back in the car and I had ten minutes left to get there!

I got to the movies, got my snacks, and went to my seat. When I sat down, I tried to grab my blanket and I felt something on my blanket. It smelled like toothpaste, so I went to the bathroom to clean my blanket and bag off.

When I got in the bathroom, there were no towels. I thought it was a good idea to use toilet paper, but that got all over my bag because it just ripped.

So, I went to ask someone and it took them forever to get it because they had a bunch of keys. They had to find the right one, but it took 5 minutes to get it.

I finally got my blanket clean! When I got back the movie, it was over. So I went home and never went to that movie theater again.